Stuber-Stone Building, 2003

Historic Overview:

The Stuber-Stone & Company automobile dealership once occupied this building on Cass Avenue. Many other automobile related businesses later occupied this building over the years. Cass Avenue was one of the first roads to be paved for the use of automobiles. The building, built by developer David W. Simmons, features lions holding shields carved in stone along the frieze. The building has recently been renovated with businesses on the first floor and residential lofts on the second.¹
